

I think it is a terrible idea to censor satellite radio. If the local channels would have provided quality content to begin with, I would have had no reason to go to satellite radio. But they do not, they only play top 40 music, which is set by the recording industry (a babbling bunch of baffoons by the way), not the listeners. And I have to listen to 30 minutes of garbage before I hear what I need to. For people like me who have a long commute into the city, there are NO stations that broadcast that distance, so if it were not for satellite radio, I wouldn't even know what the conditions were, and what roads to avoid until I was already there, which wouldn't do me much good. If you want to do something very useful, force FM to go digital, that will shake things up quite a bit, same as HDTV will once it is forced into effect, which can't be soon enough.
